Dear Robert,

Police object to this Temporary Event Notice as we believe that if in place it would undermine the crime prevention objective of crime & disorder and public nuisance. The proprietor of the premises has neglected to ensure that the original licence was protected (after 'company' bankruptcy) due to their lack of understanding of the law in general and the Licensing Act in particular. To that end, the premises traded without a licence for several weeks. Subsequent enquiries suggest that (criminal) offences may have been committed to progress a variation of a licence. There is evidence to suggest that Promoted Events have run at the premises in contravention to a condition on the licence.

The proprietor cannot be trusted to lawfully manage their premises as their past and recent history suggests. It is accepted that a Temporary Event Notice is a vehicle for even the less experienced (in matters of licensing) to have the facility of temporarily trading as if they were a licensee but the evidence suggests that the applicant should not have that facility.

Kind Regards
